Technical glitches halt Wiesel broadcast

Nobel Peace Prize winner, Holocaust survivor's speech in Koger Center cut short for Colonial Center audience

Kathleen Kemp
THE DAILY GAMECOCK

People began to file in to the Colonial Center on Tuesday to see a live feed of Elie Wiesel's address next door at the Koger Center. Some stood around waiting for others, some browsed at the makeshift bookstand selling copies of the Nobel Peace Prize-winner's books, while others filed hurriedly into the stadium, anxious to find a good seat. The broadcast was scheduled to begin at 7:30 p.m., and by then the stadium was approximately one-quarter full. "I read the story 'Night' in 10th grade as required reading, and it was always something that stuck with me," said Joshua Hendrickson, a fourth-year math and physics student. "It's kind of hard not to be affected by something like that." Others at the Colonial Center, such as Mica Jenkins, a fourth-year interdisciplinary arts student, were at the symposium on Darfur and Africa earlier Tuesday. "I wanted to hear what Wiesel has to say about genocide and human rights issues," Jenkins said. Many students were impressed such a well-known figure spoke so near the university. "I'm amazed we were able to bring such an amazing speaker," said Katie Fitzgerald, a fourth-year advertising student. "To get to hear from someone who lived firsthand the events of the Holocaust will help us keep from repeating the past." Five minutes after the broadcast was scheduled to start, an announcer said technical difficulties were causing the delay. Less than 15 minutes after the scheduled start time, Wiesel's face came over the screens, and he began to deliver his opening comments. By 7:55, the sound cut out, so that the audience could see Wiesel speaking but could hear nothing. A steady stream of people began to leave. A class of seventh-grade students from Dent Middle, who had been reading "Night" as a class,

THE DAILY GAMECOCK

Four prestigious professors participated in a panel discussion Tuesday titled "Darfur: It's Happening Again." The discussion was scheduled as part of this year's Solomon-Tenenbaum Lectureship in Jewish studies. Questions were raised on how to prevent genocide and punish genocidal people, specifically in places such as Rwanda, Uganda and Darfur. Charles Bierbauer, dean of the College of Mass Communications and Information Studies, moderated the discussion. The panel included Scott Straus of the University of Wisconsin, Joel Samuels of USC's law school, Ann Kingsolver from the anthropology department and Ron Atkinson from the history department. Before the discussion, Bierbauer said the crimes set Darfur apart. "We're not talking about Katrina, the tsunami. We're not talking about the heinous acts of 9/11," Bierbauer said. "We're talking about genocide." Genocide is unique because it is an organized attempt to wipe out a certain group of people, Straus said. "Why does it matter?" Samuels said about whether genocide is occurring in Darfur. Darfur, located in a region of Sudan, is declared by some nations as an area plagued with genocide. Countries such as China and Russia have not given a name to what is happening in Darfur because they have ties with Sudan, Straus said. Other countries do not get involved merely because the definition of genocide can be interpreted differently, Samuels said. Since 2003, between 200,000 and 400,000 civilians have been killed, Straus said. In 2004, Colin Powell set up meetings to find out what was happening in the region. The United States says genocide is happening in Darfur and has a very active role in making sure people know what is going on because of what might be guilt from its inactivity with Rwanda, Samuels said. Responsibility and accountability of genocide need to be accessed because people are not working

Students with drug offenses lose financial aid

Chelsea Hadaway
THE DAILY GAMECOCK

Students who checked "yes" on the FAFSA application saying they have been convicted of a drug-related offense automatically lost federal financial aid in the form of Pell Grants, Stafford Loans and potentially state financial aid as well, but they may be able to win it back. For charges of possession, the first offense is loss of financial aid for a year. Second offense is two years and for a third offense, financial aid is suspended indefinitely. The policy has been in effect since 2000, when an amendment was added to the Higher Education Act, which was passed in 1965.

The last time Congress reevaluated the act, an amendment was tacked on that takes away any federal financial aid if the student has been convicted in state or federal court of possessing or selling illegal drugs. Students for Sensible Drug Policy (SSDP) was formed to oppose the new policy at the national level.

"The policy causes more drug abuse and not less by blocking access to education," said Tom Angell, campaigns director for SSDP. The federal financial aid is only taken away if there is a state or federal conviction, so unless the student is charged in court, there isn't a risk of losing aid.

SANFORD COURTS BLACK VOTERS

Incumbent governor seeks minority support through TV, radio advertising

Katrina Goggins
The Associated Press

It's not everyday that a Republican governor from the South runs campaign ads talking about his civil rights record on television and radio stations that cater to black audiences, political analysts say. But Gov. Mark Sanford's campaign manager says ads the governor ran on Black Entertainment Television and urban and gospel music radio stations in South Carolina are a continuation of the governor's civil rights record, and not an indication that the GOP governor is losing his conservative base as some critics have suggested.

"Gov. Sanford enjoys broad support from the conservative base of the Republican party," campaign manager Jason Miller said. "But he also has the ability to reach out and bring new folks on to the team and that's what we're doing." The incumbent Republican governor has frequently been at odds with the GOP-controlled House and Senate, leaving some to wonder if that's why he is trying to expand his base. "There's no doubt Mark Sanford is in trouble. But it shouldn't take political desperation for the governor to pay attention to our African-American families," said Karen Gutmann, spokeswoman for Aiken County Sen. Tommy Moore, Sanford's Democratic opponent in November. Francis Marion University political scientist Neal Thigpen says there's no question Sanford is losing some of his conservative base.

"That 35 percent of the vote for Oscar Lovelace I think is indicative of it," Thigpen said, "But whether the circumstances

New clock rules really ticking off coach staff

NCAA's decision to install new rules for timekeeping causing massive headache

Everyone has heard the popular phrase, "If it ain't broke, don't fix it," right? Well, apparently the NCAA rules committee hasn't. This off-season, two new rules were implemented for college football in an attempt to shorten the length of games.

AUSTIN COLLINS
Third-year

First, the clock now starts on kickoffs when the ball is kicked, not when the ball is caught. Second, after changes in possession, the clock now starts at the blow of the referee's "ready to play" whistle instead of at the snap.

The rules haven't been very well received by anyone after two weeks of play. The coaches, the players, nor the fans are in favor of these new rules, and we're left wondering what the heck the NCAA was thinking.

The coaches are the ones that can most openly voice their displeasure and there are more than a few that are displeased. Dirk Koetter, the pass-happy coach from Arizona State, is the most outspoken coach about the new rules.

"I think it sucks," he said. "When they polled the coaches on that, it was like 90 percent against it ... the whole way that thing went down is a total joke. College football has been working fine for 100 some-odd years."

Koetter went on to say, "Why [make the change]? I just don't get it."

Joe Paterno, one of the most recognizable coaches, and a lock for the Hall of Fame, doesn't like the new

Shaking things up

Spurrier keeps offensive starters mum as Gamecocks prepare for weekend battle with Wofford

Neal Robinson

THE DAILY GAMECOCK

With Saturday's shutout loss to Georgia still looming over South Carolina, few things have changed. While coach Steve Spurrier has regained his voice, he remains disgusted at his team's inability to light up the scoreboard.

Sidney Rice, who Sporting News regards as the third best receiver in the nation, has tallied a mere three receptions for 31 yards in Carolina's two opening games.

"There could be some scheme changes," Spurrier said. "We have to do something to try and create more offense, create getting the ball towards Sidney, and the other receivers. We don't want to divulge all our new plans, but we will be a different looking offense. I'll just say that to our fans."

Changes are mainly expected to take place on an offensive line that's failed to protect Blake Mitchell and anchor the running game. Georgia's defensive linemen dominated the unit, allowing Cory Boyd and Mike Davis to tally just 34 yards.

"Most of our problems come down to blocking,"

Spurrier said. "We may start some freshmen lineman and all that, which most schools don't, but that's OK, that's where we are right now. We just need to play better."

The team boasts two highly touted freshmen offensive lineman in Garrett Anderson and Hutch Eckerson, both labeled as four star recruits by Rivals. Each player has received playing time, and Eckerson is expected to take injured lineman Gurminder Thind's starting spot. The 6-foot-6-inches true freshmen is regarded by Rivals as the number 21 tackle in the nation from the class of

Other changes have not been revealed, but redshirt sophomore Matt Raysor is expected to play against Wofford.

Only one thing is certain, Spurrier is fed up with the unit's play.

"It was discouraging watching some of our guys attempt to block," said Spurrier. "So we'll keep trying some new guys and see if we can't get better blocking and better effort."

Quarterback Blake Mitchell sustained an injury to his hand during the fourth quarter of Saturday's game, prompting Chris Smelley to take his spot.

"I think his finger is a little bit sore but he should be fine on Saturday," Spurrier said. "He threw it around (Monday night) a little bit, but he should be fine for this weekend."

Despite hinting at a possible change behind center during his post game press conference, Spurrier has not disclosed who will start against Wofford. All offensive players have been made unavailable for comment.

USC Hall of Fame inductees: Tiff Tootle

Courtesy Mike Safran

USC shortstop Tiff Tootle (1991-1993).

Alex Riley
SPORTS EDITOR

A competitive blonde softball player from Reidsville, Ga. That was what you would have used to describe Tiff Tootle before she arrived in Columbia in 1991. But Gamecock fans quickly learned that Tootle was a force to be reckoned with on the diamond.

"I played slow pitch all through high school," Tootle said. "We knew all the colleges were going fast pitch. My dad made a video; we sent it to coach; I came on an official visit, and it all worked out from there."

Future Hall of Fame coach Joyce Compton molded Tootle both on the field and in her personal life, teaching her valuable life skills and sharpening her competitive edge.

"As a kid, you don't realize what you have before you until it's all done and said," Tootle said. "And then you look back on it and realize what an honor it really was to play for coach. Just her ability to mentor and teach not only the skills, but about being a person. That alone just speaks for itself."

What Tootle and the rest of the Gamecocks did during the 1991-1993 seasons was nothing short of remarkable as they posted back-to-back 50-win seasons and beat powerhouses like North Carolina, Oklahoma, Florida State and Georgia Tech.

"It was awesome to be able to play and have that team success," Tootle said. "Just to be blessed to be in a situation where you're surrounded by people with talent and character and to be able to win 50."

While the wins and season finishes were impressive, even more amazing were Tootle's individual statistics. Her name is still one of the most prevalent in the USC record book as she holds career marks in stolen bases, runs, and hits.

But her biggest achievement is in her batting average. All four seasons at Carolina, Tootle hit over .400 and finished her career with a .432 batting average, which at the time was the best in NCAA history. Today she still sits at ninth overall. Even the softball media guide says she is "arguably the greatest player in Gamecock history."

"I keep using the word honor, and it is," Tootle said. "To me, I can't see that. But the people I have been surrounded with for so many years from my childhood, through high school, through college, and I see the people who have helped to mold me and I don't doubt it when I see those people."

After college, Tootle continued her career on the diamond playing in professional women's leagues around the country along with doing some time as a coach and earning her master's degree.

But the legendary hitter didn't stray far from the dugout and got into coaching which she is still doing today. This year marks Tootle's 8th season Columbus State University's head coach.

"I have a whole new respect for coaching after I left playing," Tootle said. "It's frustrating at times. It's very rewarding. To see the impact others have made on you and you're making on others is very rewarding."

Along with six other athletes, Tootle will take her place among the greats at USC when she joins the Hall of Fame on Thursday, something she tabs as an amazing honor for a simple girl from Georgia.

"I can't even express in words anything other than how honored I am to be a part of such an elite group," Tootle said. "Just to be considered, there's no words to express how I feel. I'm excited to get back."

Rugby club popularity ‘scrums’ out of nowhere

Jackie Alexander
THE DAILY GAMECOCK

“Ruck me, maul me, make me scrum,” Jessica Kiser screamed.

Kiser, a second-year biology student, was one of about 100 spectators cheering on the men’s rugby team Sept. 5 at Blatt Field.

The men’s team, clad in all black, began warming up on the field before its game against Lander University.

The USC 40-player team greatly outnumbered the Lander team, who traveled with only 16 players.

During a rugby game, a team must field 14 players who must pass the ball backwards to other team members. Players only wear mouth guards and take hard tackles without pads.

The team separated themselves into two groups: the forwards and the backs, or defense and offense respectively.

The backs practiced the scrum, a maneuver that includes nine players binding together in a triangle formation and pushing against the opposing team’s scrum.

“Squeeze, knees, charge” is the scrum’s motto as they squeeze together to form a tight bond, drop as low to the ground as possible and charge the other team.

The forwards practiced running the ball down the line and rucking, a maneuver much like the scrum on a smaller scale.

As some students walked to and from the Bates area, many stopped to make sense of the game, staying until the end.

When the game started, the team, also known as the “Psycho Cocks,” huddled together, jumped and yelled to get excited about the upcoming game.

Coach Geoff Mason said the team made a few good plays but needed a lot of work.

Corey Watson, a third-year anthropology student, missed a catch in the try zone, the rugby equivalent of the endzone, leading to a turnover for Lander.

Team president Erik Geib, a fourth-year political science student, watched in horror as the offense broke down and passing came to a halt, dropping to his knees and kicking water bottles.

Mason hassled the referees, disputing more than one call.

“I’ve been kicked out of tons of games,” Mason said, recalling his days as a professional player in Australia.

Mason played rugby

while he attended USC and has coached the team for several years while working full-time.

The women’s team attended the game to show support for the men’s team. Joanne Prinsloo, a second-year finance student, brought a sign reading “nobody rucks longer and harder than our Cocks!”

After tying the Lander team to 27 points, the team grouped together for a talk from the coach. Players, bruised and bloody, listened with heavy hearts to the mistakes they made.

Mason said the team needs to get in more practice before they face The Citadel, one of their more formidable foes in the SEC.

Laughter and jokes returned as the rookies put away gear and veterans joked and prepared to go to their social.

Niko Karstikko, a third-year international business student, said even through the loss and the pain, the bond is why he plays.

USC’s Ayo Akinsete plays the ball off his head earlier this year. The Carolina men’s soccer team rose to No. 10 in this week’s polls — up 11 spots from its No. 21 ranking last week after winning five straight games since a season-opening lost to No. 2 Clemson.

rules either.

“I don’t particularly like it because I think it’s all geared to speed up the game for television. Television, I think, is dominating everything we do,” Paterno said.

Even our own Steve Spurrier doesn’t like the new rules.

“I’ve never been for it and wasn’t for it at the beginning,” Spurrier said. “They didn’t ask the coaches to vote on it. They just said, ‘Here’s the new rule.’ I don’t know how much discussion was taken on it.”

Not only do the coaches not like the new rules, I’m sure the players don’t, either.

These rules are going to reduce the likelihood of new record-breaking performances. For example, we may never get to see another 2,000-yard rusher.

Over the first college football weekend, the average number of plays per game was down 14.4 plays from 2005 per game average.

After finishing last year near the bottom in the nation with 60 plays per game, The Gamecocks are averaging even fewer plays this year. South Carolina had 56 plays against Mississippi State and 55 against Georgia. The fewer plays we have, the fewer yards we gain, and the smaller the likelihood that any statistical records will be broken.

There are also thousands of fans across the country ticked off because of the new rules. We are the ones that pay to watch the games, and we don’t want to see shorter games. We love the drama and great last-second comebacks of college football.

These new rules will lower the likelihood of us seeing any more great comebacks like Flutie’s classic Hail Mary vs. Miami in 1984, or the Bluegrass Miracle in Lexington in 2002. A Web site has even been created where fans are voicing their disapproval of the rules — www.wehatethenewcockrules.com — almost 15,000 fans have signed a petition to change the rules back.

All the NCAA has to do is look at the complete lack of support for the new rules and do what’s right. Get rid of these lame new rules.

We don’t want a shorter game. We don’t want the NFL Part II. We want college football the way it used to be. We want college football the way it was on Jan. 4 when Southern California played Texas in the Rose Bowl, and we saw a great college football season capped by one of the greatest championship games. Wake up, NCAA. Change these rules.

City nixes home plans for historical island

FOLLY BEACH — The Folly Beach Planning Commission unanimously rejected plans to build 53 homes on Long Island, which is home to birds and wildlife, and has remnants of a Civil War fortification.

Twenty people spoke against the project Monday and about 75 people attending the meeting broke into applause at the decision.

The development plans had already been scaled down twice.

Originally, there were plans for 190 homes, a figure that was later trimmed to 105.

The island is really a series of islands with 140 acres of highland stretching over 2 1/2 miles between James, Peas, Oak, Morris and Folly Islands.

It includes wetlands and the remains of the earthen fortification built by Union troops.

City zoning administrator Aaron Pope recommended denying the project because there were too many lots for a street with only one access to the mainland and because there were inadequate plans for water and sewer.

Schwarzenegger rival admits leaking tape

SACRAMENTO, Calif. — The campaign of Gov. Arnold Schwarzenegger's Democratic rival acknowledged Tuesday that it downloaded — and leaked to the media — a recording of a private meeting in which the governor described a Hispanic legislator as having a "very hot" personality.

But Cathy Calfo, campaign manager for Democrat Phil Angelides, said the campaign had done nothing wrong because the file was available publicly on the governor's Web site.

"No one hacked," Calfo said at a news conference to address the role played by the Angelides campaign, first reported by The Sacramento Bee. "They accessed information that was available to the public."

Schwarzenegger spokesman Adam Mendelsohn said someone would have had to snoop to find the audio file.

"The file that was leaked to The Los Angeles Times was in a private area of the governor's server not accessible to the public without manipulation of information," he said.

In university speech, Pope decries holy war

REGENSBURG, Germany — Pope Benedict XVI said Tuesday that Islamic holy war was against God's nature and invited Muslims to join in a peaceful cultural dialogue.

In a speech at Regensburg University, Benedict made an unusual reference to jihad, or holy war — a concept used by today's Islamic extremists to justify suicide bombings and other attacks.

Benedict's address was about faith and reason, and how they cannot be separated and are essential for "that genuine dialogue of cultures and religions so urgently needed today."

Citing historic Christian commentary on holy war and forced conversion, the 79-year-old pontiff quoted from a 14th-century Byzantine emperor, Manuel II Paleologos.

"The emperor comes to speak about the issue of jihad, holy war," the pope said. "He said, I quote, 'Show me just what Muhammad brought that was new, and there you will find things only evil and inhuman, such as his command to spread by the sword the faith he preached.'"

Station repairs successful despite loss of small bolt

Rasha Madkour

THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

HOUSTON — Two spacewalking astronauts Tuesday began installing the first big addition to the international space station in more than 3 1/2 years, and NASA pronounced the outing a success, even though a small bolt floated off and got lost.

"I felt today like this is what NASA is supposed to do," lead space station flight director John McCullough. "This is what we're here to do."

Wearing bulky suits and gloves, the two Atlantis astronauts ventured outside to begin attaching a new 17 1/2-ton box-like truss section that the space shuttle delivered earlier this week. The job involved connecting 17 wires or tubes and tightening or loosening 167 bolts.

Astronaut Joe Tanner was working with a 1 1/2-inch bolt with an attached spring when the washer holding it in fell off. The bolt and spring floated over the head of astronaut Heidemarie Stefanyshyn-Piper and skittered across the truss.

While the washer went out into space harmlessly, Tanner worried the bolt and spring could get into the wiring and tubing of the truss and cause problems.

"I just hope that bolt is on its way to Mother Earth right now and not on its way" to a crucial joint, Tanner said.

Even though NASA didn't have any video showing the bolt missing the mechanism, officials said they are certain that the bolt flew off into space harmlessly.

"It's pretty trivial," McCullough said. "It didn't go inside."

Space debris can be dangerous if it punctures space station walls or spacesuits and can jam crucial mechanisms. However, spacewalkers have a long history of losing things in space. In July, Discovery spacewalkers lost a 14-inch spatula that floated away.

Two more spacewalks will be conducted during the 11-day mission to finish hooking up the new addition to the half-built space station. Construction had been on hold since the Columbia disaster in 2003.

The 45-foot, $372 million addition includes two electricity-generating solar arrays that will be unfurled on Thursday. It will provide more power to the international space station in preparation for European, Russian and Japanese science modules to be added in the next few years.

The free-flying bolt marred an otherwise successful and speedy six-hour, 26-minute spacewalk.

"You did a phenomenal job and set the bar very high for the rest of the assembly," Mission Control told the crew.

Tanner and Piper zipped through a jam-packed list of arduous but mundane construction tasks, putting NASA ahead of schedule in connecting the addition. With extra time, Mission Control assigned them eight extra jobs of bolt removing and cover unlatching that would have been part of a Thursday spacewalk.

Atlantis astronauts Dan Burbank and Steve MacLean will venture outside on Wednesday.

The spacewalk was a first for rookie astronaut Piper, who joined an elite club of female spacewalkers.

Only six other women have participated in any of the 159 U.S. spacewalks, and only one has gone on any of the 118 Russian spacewalks. A major reason: Spacesuits are too big for most women, said Piper, who is 5 feet 10. "If you fit in a suit, then the easier it is to work," she said.

Engineers determined that a protruding piece of plastic — which NASA initially thought was a filler between tiles — poses no threat at all, said John Shannon, NASA mission management team chairman.

Some hurricane evacuees travel in lap of luxury

Matt Sedensky
The Associated Press

WEST PALM BEACH, Fla. — There are the hurricane evacuation images everyone has come to conjure — stranded victims, snaking traffic and helicopters dispatched to rooftops. And then there is HelpJet.

The new service from West Palm Beach-based Galaxy Aviation guarantees its well-heeled members a seat on a chartered jet out of the hurricane zone, reserves five-star hotel rooms and limousine transfers and rolls out a red carpet — literally.

“We call it evacuation in style,” said Brian Rems, who came up with the HelpJet concept.

Rems moved to South Florida from New Jersey a few weeks before Hurricane Wilma struck last year. He noticed all the calls pouring into Galaxy Aviation as the storm loomed at sea.

And when Wilma’s arrival was imminent, Rems tried to book commercial flights for him, his wife and three children, but found nothing available. When they piled in the car to head inland, they realized they were getting nowhere and turned around.

They braved the storm at home, and an idea for a business was born.

“I said ‘There’s got to be a better way,’” Rems said.

HelpJet — which charges adults a $500 annual membership fee — subcontracts flights on 30-passenger Dornier 328 planes. When a storm is threatening land, members can dial an 800-number to book a flight to Atlanta, Charlotte or Nashville and reserve accommodations, other transportation and anything else the concierge might be able to arrange.

The flights — from West Palm Beach, Miami, Orlando, Tampa and four other Florida cities — cost about $1,850 to $1,950 per person roundtrip and small pets can be brought aboard free. Rems calls it a relative bargain, given the scarcity of available commercial airline seats as a storm looms and the cost of chartering one’s own plane.

HelpJet certainly isn’t the first to capitalize on the threat of hurricanes.

Atlanta-based Boyken International, which represents major developers, introduced a program this year guaranteeing priority construction service to get a business back up and running fast. In New Orleans, Drew Harrington started a company called Hurricane Guy, which will board up a house, empty the refrigerator and otherwise ready customers for an evacuation. And another new West Palm Beach company, Power to Go, guarantees generator-produced electricity and fuel for businesses that must keep running after a storm.

So far, only about two dozen people have signed up for HelpJet, though the company has not begun its marketing push.

A stack of sleek brochures are set on a table in Rems’ office, asking the reader to “imagine turning a disaster into a holiday.” He says he’s gotten wide interest as word of the service spreads and he ultimately hopes to sign up 1,000 people.

HelpJet has partnered with Starwood Hotels & Resorts to offer rooms to evacuees, from modest under-$100 choices to luxury suites for those, as Rems says, who choose to “turn a nightmare into a vacation.”

If all of this talk of comfort for some as death and destruction could be happening elsewhere makes someone squeamish, Rems offers notes this: HelpJet travelers will vacate commercial airline seats, which could make it easier for an average evacuee to snag one, and the service will offer free or discounted flights for utility workers, the media, doctors and others integral to post-storm operations.

“It’s not for everyone,” Rems concedes. “It’s for someone who typically would be a first-class passenger.”

Sarena Morello, a Delray Beach psychotherapist, was the first to write a check to HelpJet for her and her 24-year-old daughter. After 28 years in South Florida, she felt she couldn’t weather another hurricane, and had made plans to spend the season in Austin. When she heard about HelpJet on the local news she was overcome with excitement.

At USC, if a student violates the drug policy of the Student Code of Conduct, officials could conduct an informal administrative hearing, a formal administrative hearing and a formal university conduct hearing.

Scott Lewis, director of the Office of Judicial Affairs, emphasizes the distinction between going to court in a criminal process, where you could lose financial aid, and going through USC’s judicial system.

When a student is reported by Housing or USC Police to have violated the drug or alcohol policy, the student is usually referred to the Office of Judicial Affairs as part of an administrative process separate from the criminal process.

Usually, for a first-time minor drug offense, the student pays a fine, is put on probation and is assessed by the counseling center, Lewis said. Sometimes, the student is given a series of random drug tests.

“We tailor the sanctions to help students learn from the experience,” Lewis said.

The only exception is if a student is charged with distributing drugs, which entails immediate suspension, Lewis said.

Last year, 111 cases of students allegedly violating drug policy were reported. Ninety-eight were found responsible for information only, which is when the charges are virtually dismissed.

For state financial aid such as the Palmetto Fellows or Life scholarships, a completely separate form that has its own certification process is used, said Sharon Lindler, a financial aid office employee.

Students have to sign a form saying they haven’t been convicted or pled guilty of a felony or been convicted of a drug-related misdemeanor in any state within the past year.

In the last academic year, 11 students couldn’t sign the certification statement, Lindler said. It is usually a low number, she said.

through it, Kingsolver said. Many blurred lines exist when dealing with genocide.

Darfur, Rwanda and Uganda are easily compared to one another because of the harsh violence and the “civilians caught in the middle,” Atkinson said. Civilians are forcefully displaced, sexually violated and murdered in these three countries.

In Rwanda, the method of death for females had to do with their reproductive organs, which represented the end of new life for their ethnic group, Kingsolver said.

Uganda, south of Sudan, has been war-torn for 20 years. By last year, nearly 2 million people were relocated to camps filled with disease, Atkinson said. Camp lives are inadequate. Schooling is limited, and little or no health care exists.

The examples of Rwanda and Darfur show that the international community lacks a coherent policy, Straus said. Genocide is very morally clear but in political terms it is not clear-cut. All of these issues combined are what make it hard to overcome.

Also part of the Solomon-Tenenbaum lecture was a speech Tuesday by Elie Wiesel, a Holocaust survivor and Nobel Peace Prize winner.

began to squirm around in their seats and eventually left.

As people filed out, a solemn attendant apologized to disappointed attendees, letting them know they could watch it at some point on ETV.

People continued to politely walk by, and at least one woman stopped just long enough to look angrily at the consoling staff member.

“This is NOT OK,” she said.

The remaining people had quiet conversations or doodled on their bulletins. One woman began knitting.

Second-year students Telly Davakos, a business student,

“It’s a shame we couldn’t get it worked out beforehand,” Davakos said. “He’s the first lecturer the school’s had on education this year; I don’t know if I want to hear another one.”

Mansfield said she felt let down.

“People from all over came,” Mansfield said. “The fact it wasn’t working kind of reflects poorly on the university to the community.”

By 8:08 p.m. the sound came back, but only a small part of the audience was left.

are so severe that it could endanger his re-election and thus prompt him to try to seek votes elsewhere — I wouldn't want to say that.”

Courting the black vote could be dangerous for Sanford, Thigpen said.

“If it becomes perceived that that's what he's trying to do, it may look like pandering and it may look like something other than what a lot of Republicans in this state like,” Thigpen said. “There are some Republicans that are less progressive-minded on race than the larger number.”

Thigpen says it's likely Sanford “wants votes from everybody.” He also has the money. According to campaign finance reported filed in July, Sanford's campaign had more than $4 million despite heavy spending after the June 13 primary.

Miller would not say how many television or radio stations had run the ads, if there were plans to air the ads again closer to the general election or if similar ads were also run on Hispanic stations.

The television ads have been running for around a month on BET with the final airing on Monday, according to Sanford's campaign.

The ad says “Sanford's top staff member is African-American, and no governor has ever appointed more African-Americans to his cabinet.” It also said “Sanford has boldly called for more African-American judges in South Carolina courts,” pointing to comments made by the governor in his 2006

State of the State addresses.

The radio ads ran on Charleston radio stations Magic 101.7 FM and gospel station Heaven1390 AM, said Paul O'Malley, general manager for Citadel Broadcasting of Charleston.

The ads ran for a couple of weeks in August, said O'Malley, who wouldn't say how much Sanford's campaign paid for them.

The radio ads said: “Sanford is the first governor in South Carolina history to issue a formal apology for the Orangeburg Massacre,” the Feb. 8, 1968 incident where three students were gunned down by state troopers during a rally on the outskirts of the state's largest historically black campus.

While those are positive steps, “there are much more to be done,” Gutmann said.

IN OUR OPINION

New cheating policy almost achieves goal

Newly proposed changes to USC’s Honor Code sound like a reasonably sober acknowledgement that cheating is not always as black and white as administrators like to think.

The changes would excuse some students from the previous “first strike” penalty — suspension or expulsion — in favor of a mandatory “academic integrity” workshop, research projects or community service.

While these alternatives are a bit too soft to get the seriousness of the message across, USC has hit on one undeniable absolute: reasonable people don’t deal in absolutes, and not everyone who gets busted deserves a scarlet letter.

Plagiarism always presents the biggest gray area in the realm of cheating, and the members of this editorial board are no strangers to writers’ unwitting mistakes with citation and sources. Sentences pop up that seem to come from thin air, and we end up delivering the “cite your sources” speech a million times during the semester.

Teachers have been beating it into students’ heads since middle school: don’t look on your neighbor’s paper, don’t steal a copy of the test — and don’t put someone else’s words in your mouth.

But citation — especially when paraphrasing — is seldom covered properly.

Instead of boring workshops or pompous projects, unwitting plagiarizers deserve a good scare and a short leash. Some English professors already require papers be put on Blackboard to be scanned for word-for-word theft. Implement the same policy for those who haven’t learned, and make them painfully aware of the consequences of a second slip-up.

Stone-cold cheaters are the most worthless English 101 rejects imaginable, and they deserve a one-way ticket to Midlands Tech. A kind-hearted freshman with little college paper-writing experience can easily slip up.

Any “zero-tolerance” policy is inherently narrow-minded, and thankfully the honor code changes might widen the gap.

Straight out of right field

‘Gone wild’ girls uncovered, under age

Charges pile up against series creator, expose less-than-noble history

Apparently when he was passing out free t-shirts there just wasn’t time to check ID.

Francis, best known for his series of soft core, and, I might add, extremely disappointing, “Girls Gone Wild” films, agreed to pay over $2 million in fines after pleading guilty in federal court Tuesday.

Francis’ Mantra Films pleaded guilty to charges that it failed to create and maintain age and identity documents for performers in sexually explicit films that it produced and distributed.

The Justice Department also said it failed to properly label their DVDs and videos in accordance to federal law.

The fines, including $500,000 to be paid by Francis personally, are part of a package of conditions Mantra must adhere to in order to comply with its “prosecution deferred agreement,” that guarantees the government will drop their charges after 3 years if Mantra stays clean.

As part of this deal, one lucky “outside monitor” will have free access to all Mantra’s books, production and distribution operations.

Unfortunately for Francis, this judgment is only the latest in a series of federal and civil charges that have been chipping away at his mini-empire for the past several years.

Over a dozen different women have sued him, and he’s faced charges on everything from rape to drug distribution to racketeering.

He also has several active restraining orders filed against him by women who claim his verbal abuse and threats of physical violence left them terrified, and in one case caused a miscarriage.

Reporter Claire Hoffman has even detailed his pattern of abuse in her August 2006 piece for The Los Angeles Times.

Until now a steady stream of high priced lawyers and hushed settlements, paid for by his yearly earnings, estimated by some to be upwards of $40 million,

JACOB DAVIS
Fourth-year print journalism student had kept his legal troubles mostly out of the public eye.

While it’s doubtful Francis is more than a few dozen trucker hats away from recouping this latest judgment, perhaps now a little more light is shined on this scumbag.

Francis is the type of “Paris Hilton celebrity” that makes you shake your head and ask, “Wait a minute, how the hell are you famous again?”

Francis himself seems almost saddened by his now celebrity status. “It’s a hassle” to be bugged by the kids, he complains.

He even has the gall to bemoan that when girls see his cameras they now view it as an opportunity to exploit him.

Francis’ trademark of the Girls Gone Wild franchise is almost as ridiculous as Hilton herself trying to trademark “That’s Hot.”

In addition to contributing to the further debasement of Snoop Dogg’s once proud career, this idiot, through his late-night infomercials, thinks he’s cornered the market on spring break nudity.

Leave it to our culture to let a loser like Francis turn something as exciting as naked co-eds into a cheesy three-minute infomercial.

Here’s to hoping he slips up again and the Feds nail him to the wall.

IN OUR OPINION

Don’t invite Bulldogs to sit in student seats

In my five years at Carolina, I have yet to see such demand for tickets, or such a hassle to get into our beloved Williams-Brice Stadium. However, I was shocked to see the number of UGA fans in our student section.

Thus, I behoove my fellow students not to bring imbecile fans of opposing teams into our student section. If you want to tailgate with them, go for it. Remember our student section is relied upon for the generation of a tremendous amount of noise, excitement, spirit and energy for our fellow students on the field.

With such long lines for UGA tickets, cartoons in The Gamecock bemoaning the lottery system for ticket distribution and such pushing and shoving to get in, there is no reason for the number of UGA fans in our student section. For future games, especially against Auburn and Tennessee, please keep our student section as Gamecock as possible.

Every game, someone will bring in that girl with the obnoxious Clemson shirt, or the remains of Oglethorpe’s penal colony to the UGA game, but please let them sit with the opposing team, not in our student section.

I remember the days when you would feed me an unlimited plethora of fruits, vegetables, meats and bread.

You offered a haven where one could actually eat healthy on campus.

But now it seems you have fallen to corporate, bureaucratic greed (much like our parking system). I stood in your line today, having my “micro” meal scrutinized, inventoried, inspected and given a monetary value far greater than my meal plan can afford.

And I know you have been with that other guy, the GMP I think his name is. Unfortunately, I think you’re right for each other. You can relate to each other more than we can.

I don’t understand how over three months you have changed so rapidly. But now I will move on and try to remember the good times we shared together.

GREEK LIFE

Film depicts real purpose of Greek life

Skeptcized organization offers opportunities for fun, friends, life lessons

Anyone who knows me is also painfully aware of my penchant for movie quoting. Much like the connective fashion of the uvulus and upper dorsimus muscles, it’s boring, but it’s part of my life. So naturally when I was asked to write this little Greek snippet, my brain shuffled through endless files of movie replays.

Then it struck me, like a lightning bolt to the forehead: those two delightful words that bring a smile to all of our faces, “Old School.”

We are introduced to a group of nobodies who share the dream of being a part of an organization where brotherhood and camaraderie prevail. I can picture them now: Mitch, Frank and Beanie as the haphazard role models trying to experience those golden college years once more and to participate in something more exciting than RPGs and TMNJ reruns.

As the flick ends, we realize that despite the miscellaneous backgrounds, through the nail-biting “ritualistic” haze sessions and the numerous calls for the infamous earmuffs, the discrepancies among men unify their dissimilarities and bond them in brotherhood.

So you see, the cast of “Old School” parallels our own Greek community. We have the academically challenged Franks, the dissed and dismissed Mitches and the wealthy and successful Beanies. Heck, we even have some of the young-hearted Blues just trying to have a little bit of fun before they go.

In the end, being a part of the Carolina Greek community is not about the numbers associated with the “bought” friends or the letters proudly adorned on that colorful stack of tees. What matters most is the knowledge that when we leave this great university with that special Greek organization, we walk away knowing that in those same men and women, we have discovered the true value of friends, fun and lifelong fulfillment.

In my years here, the Office of Greek Life has made encouraging leaps toward demolishing the partitions that divide our student body. But it isn’t just Greek Life — the resolve of this issue rests halfway between humility and compromise on a busy two-way street.

With YOUR dedication, we can all become part of the “Old School” bunch here, by attending a little event I like to call the Late Night Carolina PartyWalk, a step show hosted by GAMMA and Greek Life.

So drag your booty out there Sept. 22 at 8:45 p.m., strut your letters, cheer on your friends and celebrate the diversity we’ve worked so hard to achieve! You’re bound to learn some sweet dance moves.

Scientists find links between emotional, physical health

From heartache to heart attacks, health gets checkup

Harry Jackson Jr.
MCT Campus

ST. LOUIS — Emotions come from the heart, right?

Well, that's the romantic version. The truth is emotions come from the brain.

That biological connection is attracting attention from the scientific and medical communities seeking more ways to help sick people.

"Emotions and health are critically connected on every level," said Ryan Niemiec, a psychologist and behavioral consultant with the Primary Care and Prevention Center in St. Louis. "Emotions can cause physical illness, make it worse, or they can maintain an illness — keep it from (improving) because the person is stuck in some emotion. Or they can aid in recovery."

"It's artificial to say there's a separation. Anything that happens in the body happens in the mind, and anything that happens in the mind happens in the body."

While doctors and scientists differ on how the connection works, they all agree that mind and body affect each other.

Dr. Michael LeFevre is a professor of family medicine at the University of Missouri at Columbia. The medicine community is recognizing that illness is multifaceted, he says.

"Wellness occurs in four dimensions," he said: biologically, psychologically, socially and spiritually.

"In order to feel a state of good health, you have to feel well in all of those dimensions. It's actually uncommon for an illness to be experienced in only one of those dimensions."

An example is rheumatoid arthritis. It's a biological disease that occurs when your immune system attacks your joints. "Then you're in pain and you're down about being in pain all the time, then you're not sleeping well, which affects your relationships with other people, and that makes you more depressed, and that makes the arthritis worse," LeFevre said.

"Eventually you ask, 'God, why me?' and that can affect the spiritual realm as well."

But finding hard data to support the link between emotions and illness can be difficult.

Dr. Arthur Labovitz, chief of cardiology for St. Louis University School of Medicine, explains why stress is not listed among the risk factors for heart disease.

"The data linking stress to heart disease is relatively soft," Labovitz says. "We'd like to think that being happy and a nice person would equal long life and heart health. But that's not necessarily the case."

The American Heart Association agrees with him, stating: "Managing stress makes sense for your overall health. But current data don't yet support specific recommendations about stress reduction as a proven therapy for cardiovascular disease."

Two people can have identical physical conditions and get a similar emotional jolt. One will have a heart attack and the other won't, Labovitz said, and there's no way to explain why.

Still, doctors see examples where emotions and physical health are linked, he says. One indication is a newly recognized condition called "broken heart syndrome." Doctors call it acute stress cardiomyopathy.

Someone gets bad news. That stuns the heart and the person has all of the symptoms of a heart attack, including chest pains, shortness of breath and fluid in the lungs. The heart can stop working and the person can die.

However, the condition can be cured with bed rest, and often there's no permanent damage.

Scientists are still trying to explain it. The explanation involves surging stress hormones disrupting the heart somehow.

Despite the lack of studies, there's enough evidence to take emotion into account when dealing with illness, said Dr. James O'Keefe, an author and cardiologist practicing in Kansas City,

Sibling duo Matthew and Eleanore Friedberger, known as The Fiery Furnaces, swap guitar and piano on "Bitter Tea."

THIS WEEK IN Music: Fiery Furnaces

Indie brother-sister duo serve up 'Bitter' blend of patternless pianos, synthesizers, guitars

"Bitter Tea"

The Fiery Furnaces

★★★★ out of ☆☆☆☆

Thomas Maluck

THE DAILY GAMECOCK

The Fiery Furnaces are a mystery to modern reviewers. Are they disoriented or just playfully experimental? Does each album deserve insight, or are the Furnaces just fulfilling their album-a-year promise as fast as they can?

The problem with trying to pin down a description of its sound is that it changes from track to track. The Fiery Furnaces have been offering up indie gems right alongside disjointed narratives since 2003. Its influences are as wide as they are irrelevant; you haven't heard anyone quite like this band,

And its bizarre sense of originality deserves high marks.

One might think that Furnaces brother-sister duo Matthew and Eleanor Friedberger are used to musical sibling rivalry, giving and taking ideas from each other as though the songs were a Lego set. Instead, their blueprint has Matthew writing and recording all of the instruments, with Eleanor doing nearly all of the singing.

The dynamic works great, as listeners will feel like a stranger in the Friedberger's musical funhouse, with Eleanor an odd but inviting hostess into Matthew's melodies of enormous variety.

The Furnaces don't seem to follow any sort of pattern in its music, unless you consider jumping tracks every minute predictable.

Once all of the sound is taken in, one notices a dependence on piano and synthesizer for most of the instrumentation. A guitar is often heard in the rhythm section, though it also runs about in the background for ambience.

The piano and guitar also trade places every verse, as if two takes were recorded for each song and Matthew decided to keep both. This ensures a low risk of any song wearing out its welcome for sticking to one sound for four minutes.

The best hope for a cohesive first listen is to

McCartney solo: Cool or crap?

Steven Van Haren
EDITOR IN CHIEF

As Paul McCartney tunes up his Hofner bass before a gig, he must do a lot of head-scratching while planning the set list. With so many good songs, it's like picking your 20 favorite pebbles of sand on Miami Beach.

St. Paul never needed John Lennon to write a good song, and vice versa. So when The Beatles broke up, McCartney launched "McCartney," grew Wings and never looked back.

The result was his own identity and a block of scratchy, funky-rock that carved his niche for him — one tuba and tempo change at a time.

(Important clarification: "McCartney solo" is everything after the Fab Four. Like the Heartbreakers are all Tom Petty, the Wings were all Paul.)

"Maybe I'm Amazed" from his self-titled debut? It's as classic and purely poignant as "Hey Jude" and "Let It Be." But it wasn't until "Band on the Run" that Paul took his left-handed Les Paul to the deep end of the distortion pedal.

The title track rumbles through four or five sections before finding its sunlit stride, and the three-chord punch in the last seconds of the song is one of the most underrated endings in rock history. The brass romp "Jet" complements "Helen Wheels" while piercing blasts of synthesizer run through both.

McCartney responded to disco with "Silly Love Songs," an

Let me get the obligatory comment out of the way: I love The Beatles. Almost every song they've recorded, I've enjoyed. John, Paul, George, and Ringo defined what a pop group should be in that they created albums with mass appeal and critical acclaim. This has nothing to do with The Beatles.

Paul McCartney, or Sir Paul McCartney, as it were, needs to be called out. While there is no mistaking the genius that was borne when he and John Lennon collaborated on nearly every single Beatles hit, McCartney was absolutely dreadful as a solo artist.

While George Harrison was penning the reflective "My Sweet Lord," Lennon was crafting the eloquent "Imagine," and Ringo was living off of royalties, McCartney was busy sullyng his deistical image with a group of second-rate musicians named Wings. Among his great contributions to pop music after the Beatles broke up?

"Band on the run, band on the run/ And the jailer man and sailor sam were searching every one/ For the band on the run, band on the run, band on the run, band on the run"

I'm sure Lennon is kicking himself for not writing that gem. "Band on the Run" is so bad, it spawned an equally go-awful VH1 reality series of the same name, which was subsequently canceled. Do you have any idea what it takes for VH1 to cancel

‘Chick Lit’ offers up more hits than misses

“This is Not Chick Lit”

by Elizabeth Merrick

Daniella Wassel
THE DAILY GAMECOCK

Don’t let the pink-on-black cover fool you. This really isn’t your “Devil Wears Prada”-“Bridget Jones’ Diary” chick lit, your designer purses and melodrama sex lives.

Elizabeth Merrick’s “This is Not Chick Lit” strives to overcome the women’s fiction stereotype in a collection of today’s foremost female literary stylists. In her introduction, Merrick introduces her task: to give voice to talented women writers “obscured” by the chick lit phenomenon. Already this is problematic when such a wide pool of candidates is available.

The anthology achieves its purpose with mixed results, expectable in a collection of 18 stories. Pieces like “The Seventy-two-Ounce Steak Challenge” by Dika Lam and Judy Budnitz’s TV production diary “Joan, Jeanne, La Pucelle, Maid of Orleans” are the most successful at showing off what contemporary fiction is lacking; the use of humor and irony blend with human vulnerabilities and create realistic scenarios that include the reader in the experience.

The Sept. 11-inspired “Embrace” balances everyday life and unexpected tragedy in a surreal narrative that surprises the reader by shifting points of view as much as the characters are surprised by the unfolding events. These pieces are evidence that Merrick’s idealized female fiction exists; real drama, human drama, is not found between the covers of “The Nanny Diaries.”

Unfortunately some works fail to rise above the “fluffy reading” that is chick lit to Merrick. Curtis Sittenfield chronicles inexplicable female backbiting in “Volunteers are Shining Stars” while the protagonist in “The Red Coat” by Caitlin Macy steals from her housekeeper on a whim and out of sheer spite.

Both protagonists could easily be found in typical condescending women’s fiction at some point of their lives; a Washington, D.C., yuppie and a Manhattan stay-at-home wife are hardly “increasing our awareness of other perspectives and paths.” It’s easy to wonder why these stories were included when Merrick wants to show the reader “women writers pushing the envelope of serious fiction.”

“This is Not Chick Lit,” however, has more high points than low points. Though falling into the modern trend of banal, then suddenly enlightening non-plots, the works included here are witty, observant, and appealing. Narrators range in age and gender, nationality and sexuality. The only possible connection among all of these is their creators’ sex, making for a thought-provoking read.

As with all short work collections, give “This is Not Chick Lit” a try if you’re looking for a crash course on unsung women writers or merely an alternative to the latest Candace Bushnell novel.

lock in on a melody and hear where it goes over the course of the track. Otherwise, the lyrics will throw you off with the weird delivery. When’s the last time you heard vocals sung backwards?

It’s better to get lost in the funky bass and handclaps of “Oh Sweet Woods” or the fun sweeping techno lines trading with a building piano in the title track.

“Bitter Tea” seems to have a theme of curiosity and blues over lost love.

But these aren’t sob stories about simply breaking up.

Often someone disappears to leave Eleanor in a strange position of nostalgia. “I’m Waiting To Know You” is about a navy guard looking for balloon-lifted love notes through his telescope until they stop showing up.

In a rare moment of clarity, she sings, “Of my past/only the sadness stays,” on the track “Benton Harbor Blues.” Everything else is awash in cascading musical flourishes, serving to drown her sorrows until the next unique goodbye.

Still, no matter how bad McCartney’s solo stuff may be, the aforementioned tracks pale in comparison to the monument of schlock that is “Wonderful Christmas Time.”

Basically, McCartney was a victim of his own prior success. Nothing he made post-Beatles could ever compare to earlier compositions, and it’s a bit of a shame he even tried. Perhaps he should have taken the Ringo approach, and found his way on “Shining Time Station” and hung out with Thomas the Tank Engine. It would’ve been more redeeming.

Action: The onslaught of Oscar hopefuls arrives

Phoebe Flowers
MCT Campus

Hard though it may be to believe, we’ve reached the final third of the year. This is especially shocking when you take stock of what movies we have — and haven’t — seen, and realize just how many more there are to come.

After all, unlike last year — when the eventual best picture winner, “Crash,” and the critically lauded “Cinderella Man” had already come and gone from theaters — 2006 has yet to really embrace its needy inner child. You know, the one who’s so nakedly desperate for accolades and laurels and other shiny objects?

True, we’ve seen a likely best actress Oscar nominee in “The Devil Wears Prada’s” Meryl Streep, and a possible best picture candidate in Oliver Stone’s surprisingly sentimental “World Trade Center.” But with fewer than four months left to release the rest of the contenders, it’s time to gird for a seriously busy fall.

Of course, there is a downside to the onslaught of big guns Hollywood is about to unleash. All the blatant award hopefuls could completely dwarf the offerings that aren’t intended to ever make it onto any Academy member’s voting ballot, but may have value nonetheless.

Herein, we’ll try to separate the wheat from the chaff — the “All The King’s Men” from the “Jackass 2,” say — while keeping in mind that there’s more to movies than the pursuit of golden statuettes. (There is, for example, “Borat.”)

And, if you think this is overwhelming, just remember — we’re not even dealing with the holiday releases yet.

FOR YOUR OBVIOUS CONSIDERATION

“Hollywoodland”: Yes, Superman returned this summer in the foxy form of Brandon Routh. But this intriguing biopic focuses on a darker aspect of the Man of Steel — the questionable death of the actor, George Reeves (Ben Affleck), who played him on TV in the ’50s. Director Allen Coulter, a frequent contributor to “The Sopranos,” frames the mystery from the viewpoint of a private investigator (an on-point Adrien Brody) who gets tangled up in the case. (Sept. 8)

“The Black Dahlia”: A legendary director (Brian De Palma) who seems poised for a comeback. A story from “L.A. Confidential” author James Ellroy. The lush Scarlett Johansson, who would be sultry in braces and pigtails, in full-on noir mode. “The most notorious murder in California history.” Bring. It. On. (Sept. 15)

“All The King’s Men”: Despite its long delay (it was originally set to be released a year ago), this remake of the Oscar-winning 1949 film, itself based on a Pulitzer Prize-winning novel, still looks awfully fresh. Steven Zaillian (“A Civil Action”) directs the infallible Sean Penn as a Southern politician of dubious morality. The stellar cast includes Jude Law, Patricia Clarkson, Kate Winslet, Anthony Hopkins and James Gandolfini. (Sept. 22)

“Children of Men”: In this evidently rather loose adaptation of the P.D. James novel, Clive Owen and Julianne Moore star as denizens of a near-future world in which babies have ceased to be born. Alfonso Cuarón (“Y Tu Mama Tambien,” “Harry Potter and the Prisoner of Azkaban”) should mine plenty of creative tension from the dystopian angst. (Sept. 29)

“The Departed”: The action of the inspired Hong Kong crime thriller “Infernal Affairs” is transplanted to an Irish Mafia-plagued Boston, with players including Matt Damon, Leonardo DiCaprio, Mark Wahlberg and, oh yeah, Martin Sheen and Jack Nicholson. Is there anything that could make this movie more compelling? Well, as a matter of fact ... the director is Martin Scorsese, and man do these look like some awesomely mean streets. (Oct. 6)

“Flags of Our Fathers”: Clint Eastwood again teams up with his “Million Dollar Baby” screenwriter Paul Haggis (director of “Crash”), plus “Jarhead’s” William Broyles Jr., to mount this historical tale of the six men (including Barry Pepper and Ryan Phillippe) who raised the flag in a pivotal World War II battle. For those interested in balance, a companion piece from the Japanese perspective will be out next year. (Oct. 20)

“The Prestige”: Speaking of teamwork, “Batman Begins” director Christopher Nolan recruited star Christian Bale for this period drama about a rivalry between magicians (fellow superhero-on-leave Hugh Jackman plays the other one). Scarlett Johansson and Michael Caine are also on board. (Oct. 20)

“A Good Year”: It what looks like some kind of bet to see how far away they could get from “Gladiator,” Ridley Scott and Russell Crowe are the marquee names in a straightforward, heartfelt and contemporary drama about a successful businessman (Crowe) who inherits a vineyard in Provence. Are you not entertained? (Nov. 10)

“Bobby”: At first glance, the phrase “written and directed by Emilio Estevez” might not exactly set off your quality detector. But this biopic about the 1968 assassination of Robert F. Kennedy Jr. has attracted considerable buzz, not to mention an ensemble cast including William H. Macy, Laurence Fishburne, Lindsay Lohan, Anthony Hopkins and Demi Moore. (Nov. 23)

SAGITTARIUS Don’t get stuck in repeating a procedure that doesn’t work. Ask for input from others and listen to your own imagination.

CAPRICORN Pay more attention to business now, things are starting to move quickly. It would be easy to make a mistake.
AQUARIUS Some people may think you’re radical, but you’re actually quite cautious. You like to play exciting games, but you sure don’t like to lose. Make careful plans now.
PISCES It’s always good to have enough on hand for emergencies. Don’t expect somebody else to do it for you, but you can look out for the others.

RULES FOR E-MAILING RECRUITERS.

Prepared by: Sandy Tomes

Did you know that an e-mail can sabotage your job search? Many job postings require candidates to apply via e-mail. Recruiters say that NOW an e-mail rather than a handshake is the first impression. How long does the computer screen have to convince a recruiter to view a resume and cover letter? The answer is SECONDS, so make them count.

DO'S

- Be professional and polished.
- Use proper English and grammar – forget IM rules.
- Be succinct and straight forward.
- Tailor "cover letter" email to job and use part of position description to reflect your skills and experience.
- Which is correct – attaching a cover letter or letting the body of the email be your cover letter? BOTH are correct. If attaching, write a brief note in the email indicating the resume and cover letter are attached.
- Use subject line to indicate position and/or company name. "Qualified candidate seeking position as..." or "Qualified candidate seeking position with..."

DON'TS

- Use funky fonts or distracting backgrounds. Recommend Times New Roman or Arial font, black font color and white background.
- Use cute e-mail addresses. Example of a proper address: yourname@hotmail.com
- Give cell number on resume or cover letter without setting up a professional voicemail message with NO music.
- Use attention-grabbers to attract attention such as an unrelated story or personal musing.

UNIVERSITY OF SOUTH CAROLINA CAREER FAIR

BLITZ
2006
WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 20

The only road to the office isn't really a road.
The only way to communicate is by satellite.
The only way to solve the problem is to invent a new technology.
Welcome to our world.

We perfected the industry's most advanced 3D virtual reality technology for a reason.

It's what we do – perhaps better than anyone. At Schlumberger, we challenge our people to do the impossible. We push their talents in unexpected directions. And we offer career paths unlike anything you've ever experienced.

Here your talent will focus on some of the most complex technical and engineering issues in business. It means partnering with colleagues from every corner of the world, sharing ideas, winning patents, making a real impact. As the leading name in oilfield services, we are committed to maintaining an intellectual and technological advantage well into the future. That's where you come in. EOE.

IT'S YOUR EVENT...MAKE THE MOST OF IT!

Prepared by: Rebecca Cody

You've just remembered that Career Fair Blitz is today! Dressed in jeans, you race to the Coliseum thirty minutes before the event is to end and approach the first recruiter you see, gasping for breath. It's a few moments before you realize she's looking for engineering majors and, since you haven't introduced yourself or given her your resume, even longer for her to realize your major is psychology...

What's wrong with this picture? The following advice will help you make the most of Career Fair Blitz...and make a positive first impression on the employers you meet there:

- Decide in advance which employers you'd like to meet (see the Career Center website for a list of attendees and their job opportunities or this publication). Learn as much about them as you can.
- Determine your goal for the event. Are you seeking a full-time job? An internship or co-op? Networking? Be able to state your goal clearly to employers of interest.
- Develop a professional resume. OptimalResume, offered by the Career Center, provides excellent assistance. Visit the Career Center for a resume critique; then make copies of your final draft on high-quality paper to distribute at the Fair.
- Verify that you have the appropriate attire. Professional dress is a must. Consult with a Career Center staff member as you plan what to wear to the Fair.
- Visit the Career Center to establish an interactive account in USC CareerLink. Some employers will conduct on-campus interviews at a later time with students they meet at the Fair. You must be interactive in CareerLink to participate.
- Plan your "sales pitch" – a thirty-second message conveying to employers your related skills and experience, and how they make you a highly desirable candidate.
- Make arrangements to arrive early the day of the Fair if at all possible.
- Use the knowledge you gained from your research to converse intelligently. Asking each recruiter questions about his/her company further demonstrates your interest (and you learn even more).
- Watch your body language. Smile, make eye contact, and shake hands firmly. Speak confidently. Wear your nametag prominently. Don't fidget or look away. No food, drinks, or gum. Be enthusiastic!
- Follow up! Get business cards from the employers you meet and send thank-you letters as soon as possible (see the Career Center for samples). Two weeks after you mail the letter, call the recruiter to express your continued interest.

Remember, it takes fifteen seconds to form a first impression, but with the right preparation, you can make yours a good impression that won't soon be forgotten. Good luck!
